Interview with Patrick Szewczyk, ECU School of Computer and Security Science. Smale says that there has been some interesting research out of ECU recently, showing that when they clear their phone or tablet before selling it unto someone else, they are not necessarily removing all the data from it. Szewczyk mentions that there has a lot of prior research done on hard disks that is the same with laptop and computers. He says that he started the study on memory card.

Charlie Sheen, former Two and a Half Men star, recently revealed he is HIV positive on the American talk show Today. The media were heavily criticised for the way they reported the story, with concerns on the stigmatisation of people with HIV and AIDS. Dr Jennifer Power, Research Fellow, La Trobe University, says hopefully it is a good thing for Sheen to be open about his HIV status and free himself from stress and being a target of extortion. Dr Power says people are still anxious about disclosing that they have HIV. Simon Ruth, CEO, Victorian AIDS Council, says the media started reporting about Sheen's condition a week ago. Ruth says the media used a lot of words he wouldn't liked to have seen used and breached Sheen's confidentiality and privacy. Ruth mentions the Grim Reaper bowling alley advertisement says the movie Dallas Buyers Club perpetuates the concept that HIV is going to kill people. Ruth says the HIV treatment today are good and people can live a healthy life, as compared to those in the 1980s. Associate Professor Trevor Cullen, Edith Cowan University, says the HIV medications have improved since the last 10 years. Rob Lake, executive director, Australian Federation of AIDS Organisations, says fear of HIV is one reason why people don't want to get tested. Lake says the HIV treatments in 2015 are quite amazing, especially so in Australia. Lake says the anti discrimination protection system and Australia's health system are part of the reason.
